

Inigo Fraser Jenkins

Global Head of Quantitative Strategy
Nomura

Inigo Fraser Jenkins is Global Head of Quantitative Equity Strategy, Head of European Equity Strategy and Managing Director, with Nomura in London. He joined Lehman Brothers in 1999 and transitioned to Nomura with the purchase of the Lehman European business in 2008. He has been consistently top 3 ranked by Institutional Investor for the past decade. His research includes analysis of the fund management industry, factor allocation and quantitative stock selection strategies. In addition to his quantitative research he is also responsible for European Strategy including top-down views on markets and sectors.

Prior to joining Lehman Brothers, Inigo worked at the Bank of England undertaking quantitative research on Financial Stability.

Inigo has a BSc in Physics from Imperial College, London; an MSc in History and Philosophy of Science from the London School of Economics and an MSc in Finance from the Imperial College Business School.