How branches operate

“The Branch is the Bank”

- The Branch Manager makes all decisions regarding:
  - Recruitment
  - Costs
  - Marketing, customer selection & management
  - Credits
  - Pricing

- Operate within a strong compliance framework/culture

- There are no sales or activity targets

- No central call centres
Huddersfield Branch – an example

- Opened January 2008 with 4 staff
- Now 8 staff with banking experience of 227 years
- All staff live locally
- SME town with population of 150,000
- Broke even after 18 months
The decision to open a new branch

- No fixed plans or timescale for opening new branches – “as long as it takes...”

- The essential starting point is to find the right Branch Manager, who must:
  - share our values - lengthy recruitment process, heavy focus on cultural fit
  - convince us he/she can develop, over time, a branch with a better than average C/I ratio (within its region)

- In addition they will have:
  - Typically over 30 years’ banking experience
  - strong local market knowledge and connections

- Increasingly, Branch Managers are internally recruited – half of all BM appointments and a third of new branch BM appointments in the last 12 months
Establishing a new branch

- A Branch Manager and his/her staff spend considerable time in neighbouring branches before opening their own
- The vast majority of new branches contain at least one ‘Handelsbanker’
- Strong emphasis on only selecting customers with whom we wish to develop a long-term relationship
- No targets set (volume, break even etc) – a patient focus on building a sustainable branch
- Only customers that have a significantly better cash flow than average
- Limited discretion, and particularly close credit scrutiny in early period
  - strong credit follow-up process
- More branches lead to a tighter network, where (regional) head office support is delivered ever closer to the branches → results in stronger control
